ALASKA EMPLOYMENT

It is difficult to give definite advice with regard to employment opportunities in the State of Alaska because the situation is constantly changing, and much work is of a seasonal nature. A safe rule to follow, in all cases, is for persons seeking work in any field not to go to Alaska without definite assurance of employment. Actual contacts are advisable but, lacking that, those seeking employment should possess sufficient funds to maintain themselves for at least several months. Wages are generally higher than in the other States and vary considerably from one part of Alaska to another, in keeping with the cost of living and labor supply in the different areas.

There has been a recent increase in misleading and fraudulent advertising in connection with employment in Alaska and employment information. Postal authorities have filed charges in some cases. Job information from other than official sources or bona fide employers should be verified before traveling to Alaska for such advertised opportunities.

Local State Employment Service offices have, or can obtain, information on specific Alaska worker shortages. Most employers in Alaska recruit through the Alaska State Employment Service. Job seekers may file applications with offices of the Alaska State Employment Service at the following addresses:
